

Wedding abroad website www.marryabroad.co.uk is delighted to announce the expansion of its site with the launch of 7 new African wedding pages - Zambia, Namibia, Kenya, Zanzibar, Tanzania, Madagascar and the Seychelles.

African tour operator Pulse Africa is the first advertiser on these pages, with further wedding professionals soon to join.

Stuart Inglis from Pulse Africa says “we feel the time is right to show UK couples the great value of having a wedding in Africa. Why not do something different and exchange your vows on an idyllic sandy beach in the Seychelles, or have a bush wedding under African skies? Getting married abroad is often less costly than doing it in UK so why not have a luxurious wedding abroad, at a fraction of the cost of one at home?”

Considering the current global climate, cutting back on your wedding need not be the end of your fairytale dream. Couples are becoming more imaginative with their finances, and friends and family are happier to spend money on a combined holiday and wedding than splashing out on expensive presents.

www.marryabroad.co.uk provides a wedding planner finder service, and gives information and advice on how to get married abroad to couples interested in an overseas wedding. With over 50 countries now on the site couples have a fantastic choice of wedding professionals around the world to choose from, offering every type of wedding imaginable.

Charlotte Hand from the site says “exotic weddings have become more and more popular over the past ten years, but as money worries continue they’re proving to be a godsend to couples still dreaming of a luxurious wedding but unable to afford one at home.”

Sometimes even once in a lifetime events have to be altered to make the most of an uncertain situation.
